SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The German Collection is an artificial one, made up of a variety of documents and papers. The papers are mostly correspondences of a scholarly nature. Letters and postcards are often addressed to, and sometimes written by well known 19th century Jewish scholars. In addition, there are a number of manuscripts, typescripts, notes, and drafts of articles and books. For the well known Bloch-Rohling trial, opinions by prestigious Christian experts in Jewish literature, including Th. Nöldeke, August Wünsche, and A. Merx, were obtained and these are now part of the German Collection.

The vacancy of a rabbinic position produced an inordinate volume of correspondence and introduces the researcher to a large number of German rabbis who were desirous to be appointed or who recommended someone else whom they deemed to be suitable for the position. An extremely well known layman was among those who expressed their opinion concerning the desirability of candidates.

Several professors of the Hebrew Union College were recipients of correspondence. One of them received letters from a European book dealer, and on one occasion the College was billed by the same merchant.

An almost illegible letter by Jacques Offenbach, which according to someone's comment deals with "The Tales of Hoffmann," is probably the most glamorous item of the whole collection. But cantors who are famous as composers of synagogue music are also represented.

Among the many trivia contained in the German Collection, the scholar doing research in nineteenth century Jewry and particularly on individual scholars representing the Wissenschaft des Judentums, may expect to find hereunto unpublished facts concerning the objects of his research.

The archival material in the collection consists of genealogies, letters of protection, concessions, membership lists, and vital records. There is also a number of newspaper clippings.

The German language is used almost exclusively in the German Collection, though Italian, Portuguese, Hungarian, Danish, French, Dutch, and English do occur on rare occasions.

Prior to processing, the German Collection contained a separate folder marked Dr. Louis Grossmann Collection. In it were 54 documents. Since according to contents and language most of these documents fit very well into the German Collection, they were completely integrated. However, they are enumerated and described in the Appendix I of the German Collection.

Also, the unprocessed material contained 18 items which were identified as Kirschstein Collection documents. Therefore, they were removed from the German Collection and incorporated into the Kirschstein Collection. They are listed in Appendix II.
