BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

Ishmael b. Abraham Isaac ha-Cohen (Laudadio Sacerdote), Rabbi of Modena, scholar, author, and halakhic authority was born in 1723 in Modena, Italy. Among the works he wrote, besides the responsa, novellae, decisions, and sermons contained in his collection, are Zera Emet (Livorno and Reggio 1786-90), a three part compendium of responsas; Shebah Pesah, a Passover Haggada commentary; some poetry, including secular; and expert opinions on questions submitted by the Napoleonic government to the Assembly of Notables in Paris in 1806 (drafts of some of which are to be found in this collection, 7/3). Laudadio Sacerdote died in 1811.

Laudadio Sacerdote died in 1811.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Laudadio Sacerdote (Ishmael Cohen) Collection is arranged by series: correspondence (1744-1812); responsa, novellae, and decisions (mostly undated); and sermon notebooks (which contain, besides sermons, many eulogies of Italian rabbis and scholars) (1749-1804). The languages are Hebrew-Aramaic and Italian. The Hebrew hand is cursive and rabbinic, and its legibility varies from writer to writer. The Italian hand, unlike the Hebrew is often very difficult to read.

Within series, almost all of the correspondence is addressed to Sacerdote and is alphabetically ordered. Outgoing correspondence is chronologically arranged. The second series, responsa, novellae, and decisions are loose and in notebooks. As found, they revealed little order with respect to type, subject, or time; and within the same notebook, one can find, for instance, all three kinds from various dates. Rather than impose on them a subject order whose consistency would be difficult to maintain, and because a chronological order is out of the question, original sequence is kept, and the subject tracings, in effect an index, guide the researcher into this series. In the third series, the sermon notebooks are chronologically arranged, some are provided with tables of contents, and the sermons are most often titled according to weekly Torah readings.

The subjects treated in the correspondence series and in the responsa, novellae, decisions series to a considerable extent overlap. In fact, most letters contain in addition to questions asked of Sacerdote his drafted replies. And many of these replies can be found entered as responsa in the notebooks and loose papers of the second series. Moreover, in several cases, it is noted on the responsa that they have been published. Most, however, appear not to have been printed. The subjects of the first two series are both ritual and legal. The circumstances of the responsa and decisions are both practical and hypothetical. Local minhagim are very often discussed and weighed against the law, both secular and religious. Objections to decisions are raised, and points in arguments are disputed. Innumerable earlier authorities, from the Mishna and Talmud down to those of more recent times, are frequently cited and quoted. The novellae deal mostly with individual Mishna and Talmud tractates or portions of them. Several concern Caro's Shulhan Arukh. The subject tracings reveal how wide the range of topics treated in this collection.

The value of this collection to the student of the responsa literature is considerable. The responsa, together with the novellae and decisions, offer a look at Sacerdote's progressive stand with respect to Jewish Law and custom and the conflict between tradition and the needs of modern times. In this connection, his replies to the questions submitted by Napoleon to the Paris Assembly of Notables and the Grand Sanhedrin are of great interest. To the student of Italian Jewry, the collection will prove useful for the information on day-to-day Jewish life in the 18th and 19th centuries it contains. On scholarly life and activity, too, the collection offers a wealth of information. To the student of Jewish homiletics, the sermon series will be of valuable service.
